

2/ I don't know what name the initials would stand for. So far as I ever knew, that farm has been in the Larimer name for generations, and as you said you had a cornerstone dated 1824 with the initials T. W. L. that could have been my grandfather Larimer's father, I really don't know what his name was,

Well, well, I am so ashamed of the fact that I mislaid your letter and was beginning to answer it when I fell and broke a bone in my right ankle, just after returning from Louisville, Kentucky, where our daughter lives and her twin son and daughter were married each one six days apart. Then our bed company arrived a few days after I got that big old cast on, and so --- I guess in the mad rush and everything your letter, along with this letter I had started, got mislaid. Harry, my dear husband, found it along with some other writing material, just the other day. I had looked everywhere for it as I needed your address. So now I am going to try and give you any information I can, which is very limited.
